AUROMA
HOLIDAY VILLAS

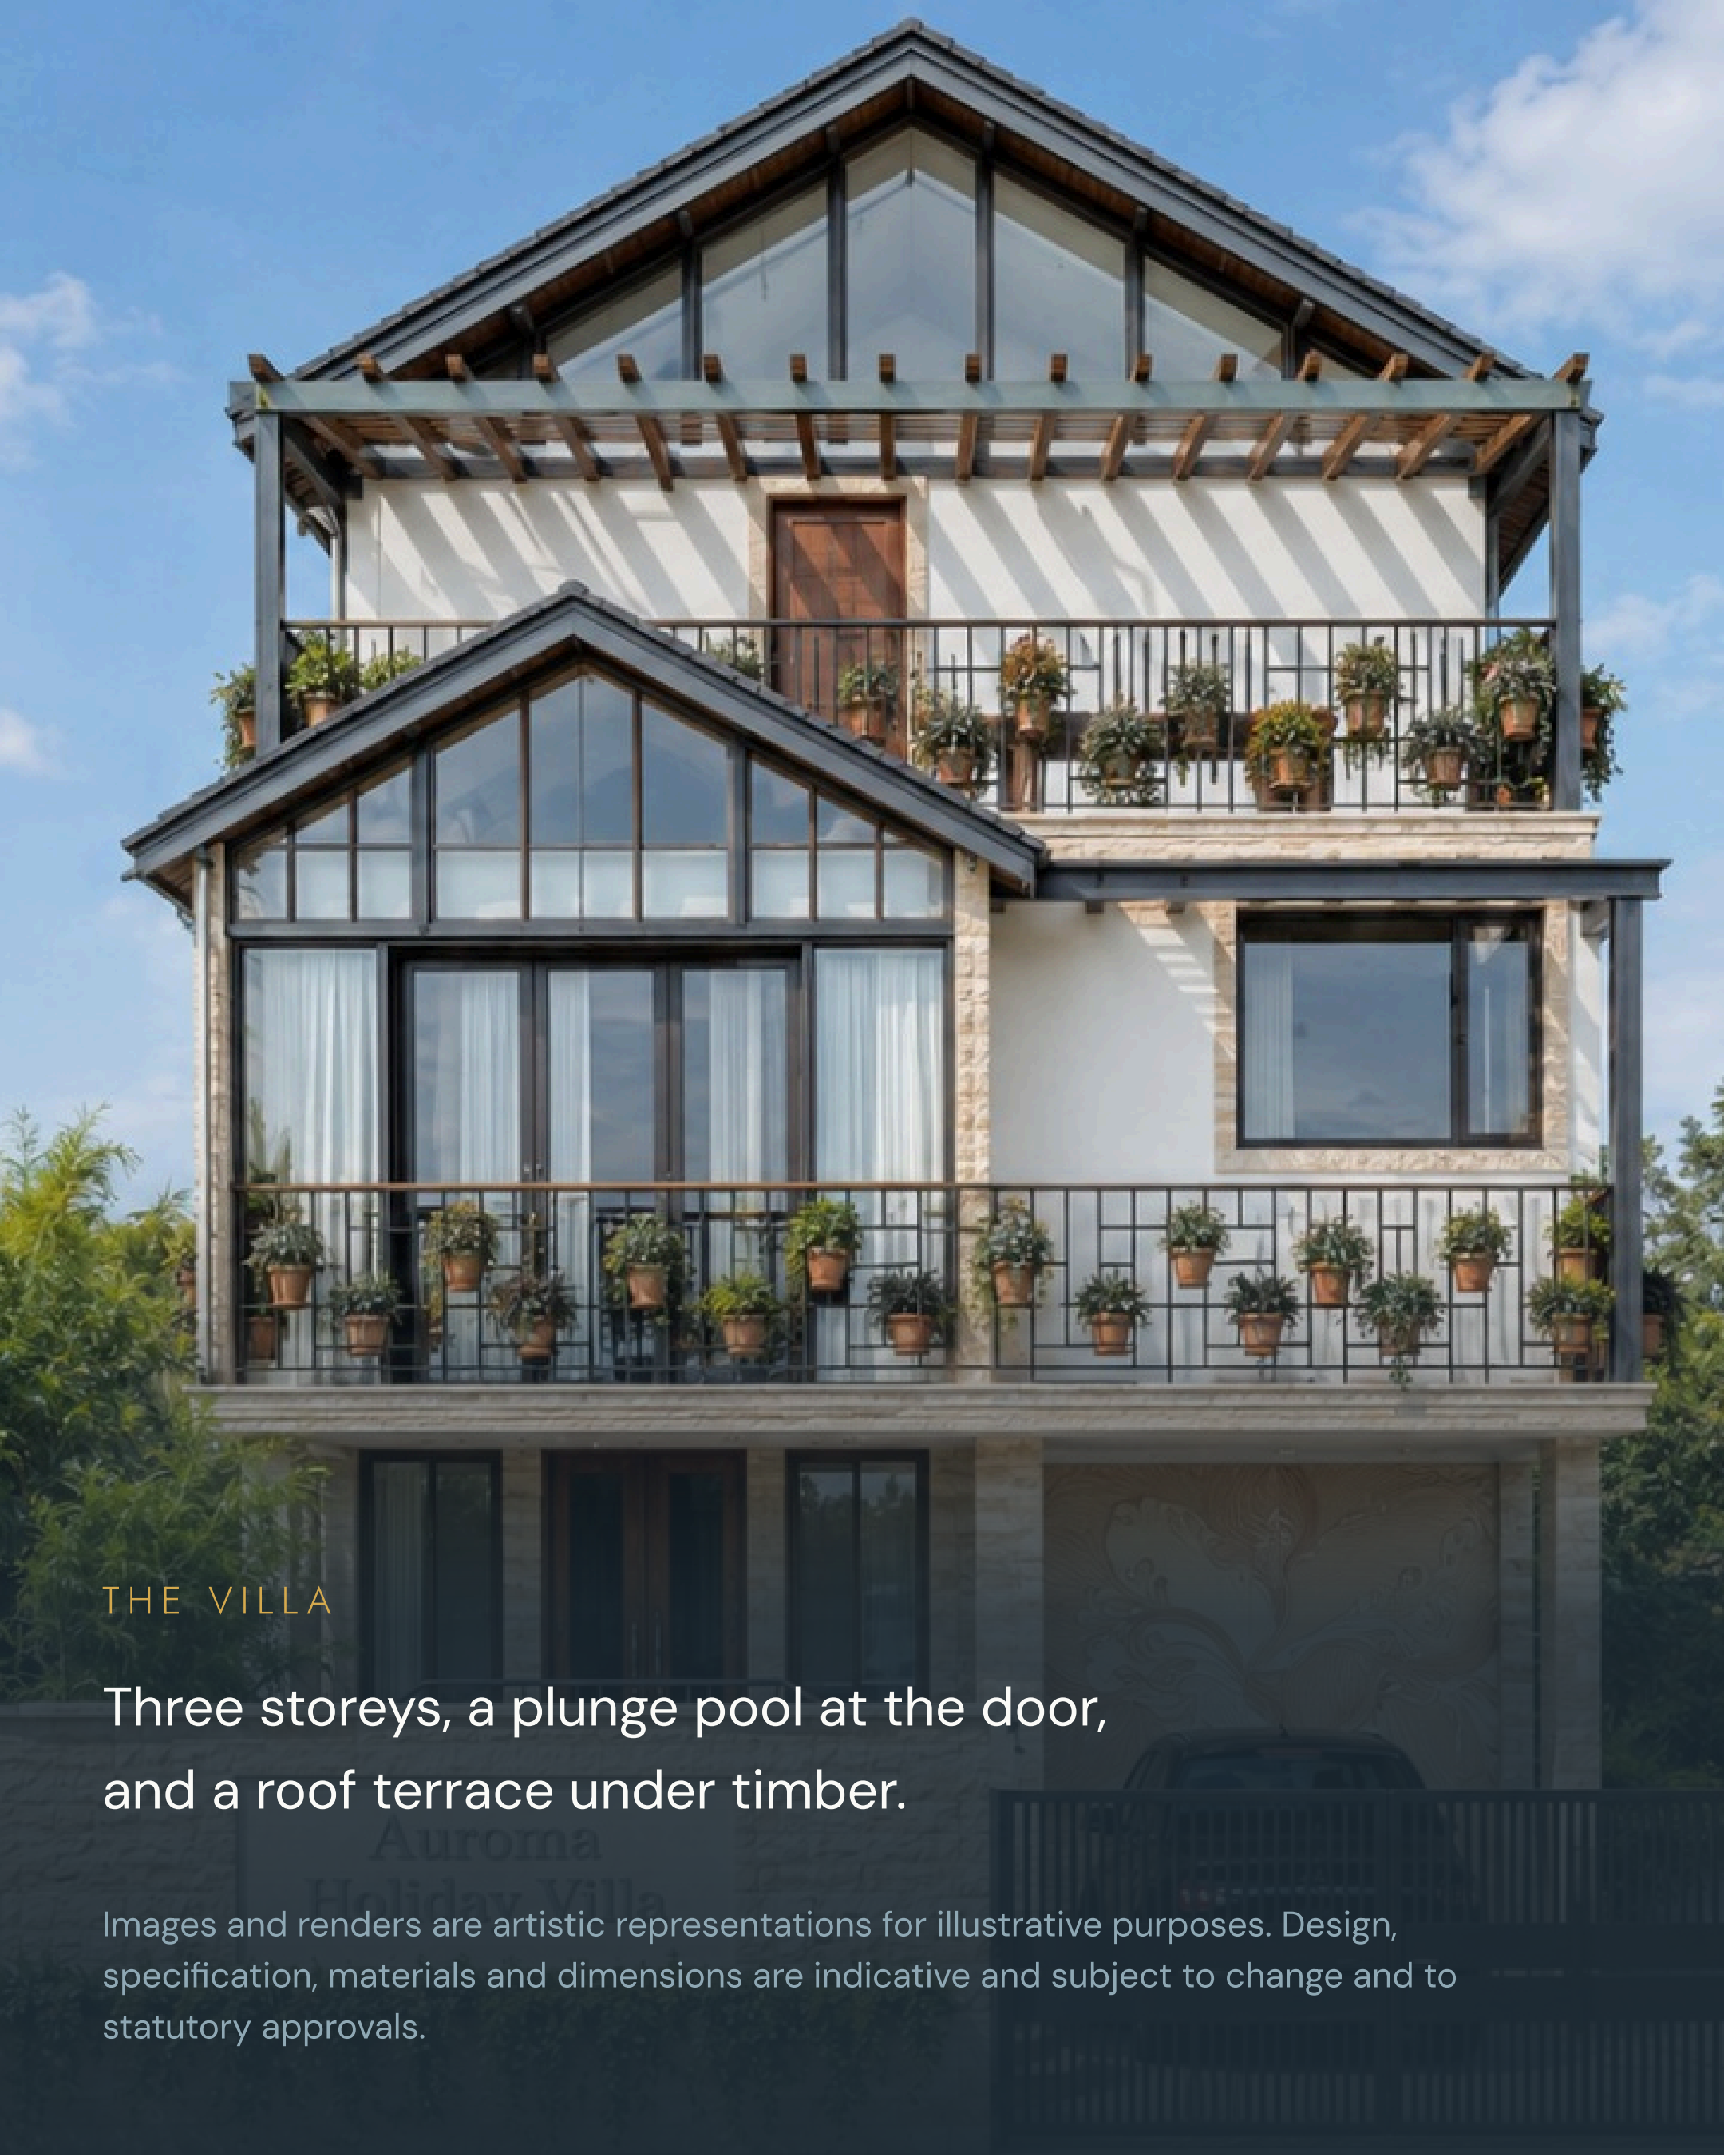

Holiday here. Host here.

THE CASE

Most holiday homes ask more than they give back.

You'd use it six weekends a year, and it sits empty for the rest. You don't live in Pondicherry — running a short-stay let from wherever you are isn't something you signed up for. And everyone selling you a villa promises a number they can't stand behind.

We built ours differently. And we'll introduce you to the people who run it.

THE VILLA

Three storeys, a plunge pool at the door,
and a roof terrace under timber.

THE ARCHITECT

Ar. Trupti Doshi

Principal Architect and Co-founder, The Auroma Group. She has spent twenty-five years asking a question most builders never ask: what would it take for a house to feel alive?

DESIGNED FOR HOSTING

Decisions we made because someone else will stay here too.

Sleeps eight, in three ensuite bedrooms.

Group bookings are the difference between a listing and a business.

A plunge pool at the door, not down the road.

Private, and visible from the living room the moment you walk in.

A game room on the top floor.

Pool table, carrom and chess under a timber pergola, open to the evening air.

Rooms that feel different from one another.

A guest who moves from the courtyard to the terrace to the pool has had three different mornings in one house.

Materials that get better with age.

Lime, stone and timber wear in rather than wear out — so the house still looks right in ten years.

You won't be running it yourself.

You don't live here — we do. We'll introduce you to hosts and property managers already operating in Auroville and Pondicherry who handle listings, guests, cleaning and keys. They contract directly with you. We make the introduction and take nothing from it.

DESIGN FEATURES

Built the way the climate asks.

- Designed to stay cool without air-conditioning
- Solar-ready, to bring the running cost down
- Rainwater harvesting and storage, sized for the dry months
- Planting chosen to hold green through summer
- Eco-friendly materials, chosen to be beautiful as they age
- Cross-ventilation and daylight in every room
- Shade, birds and a herb garden within arm's reach

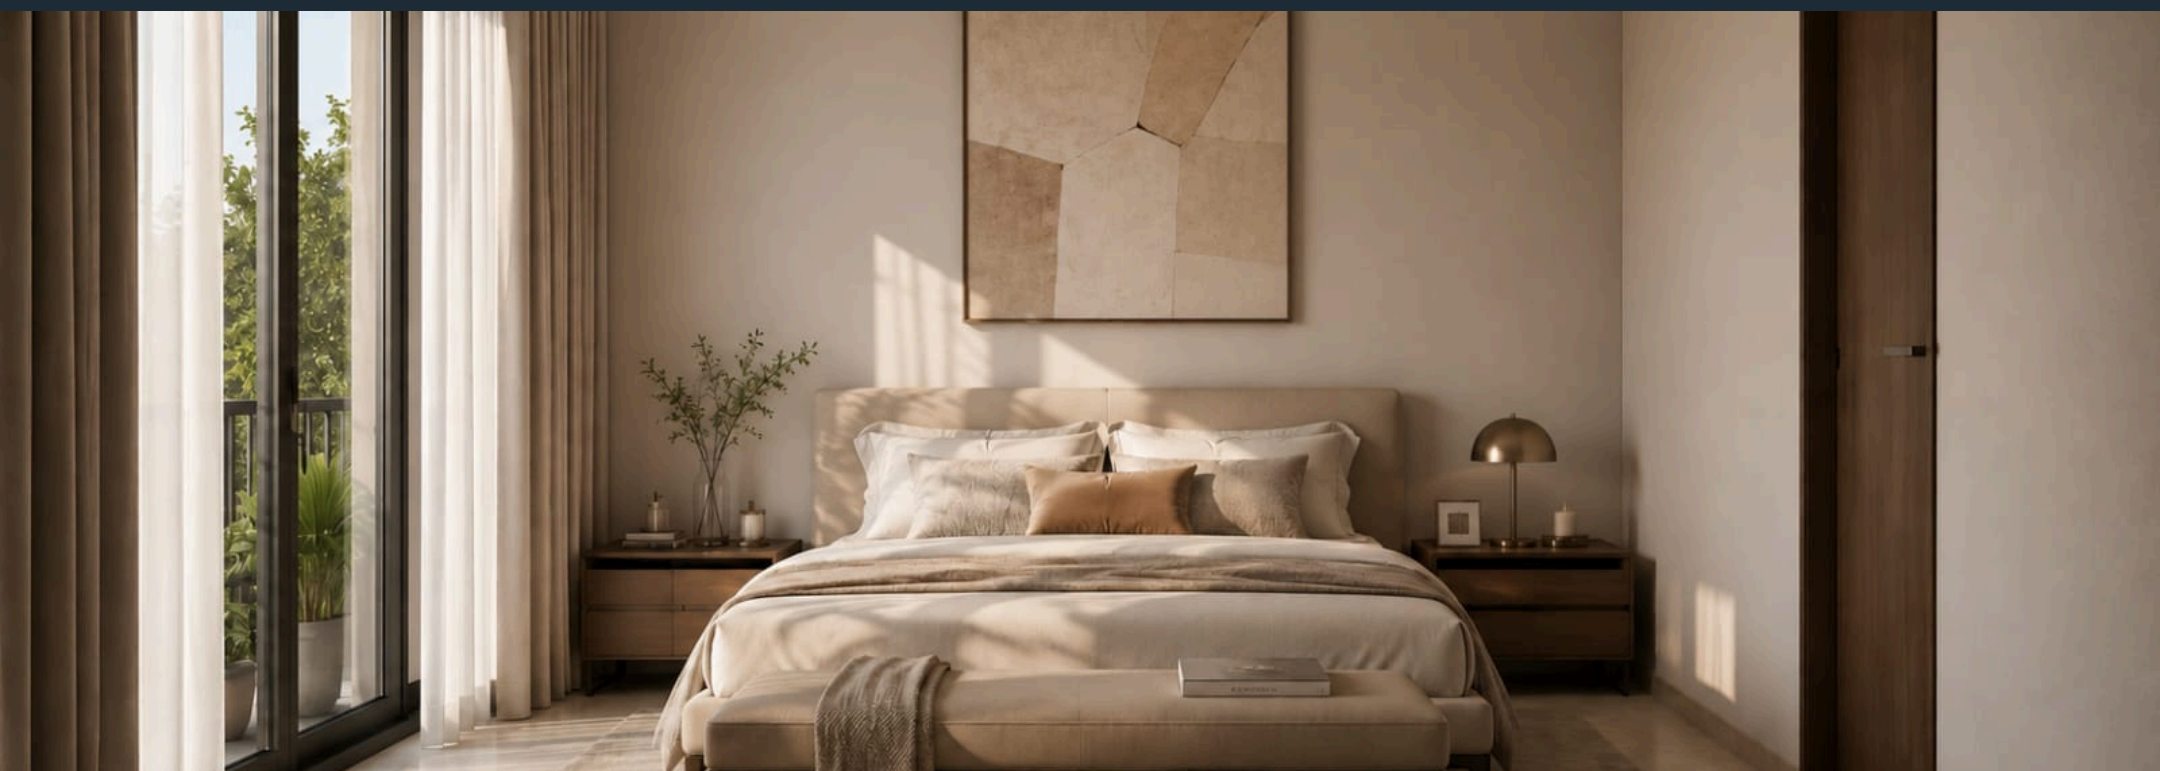

The same principles that made Gratitude Ecovilla India's first House of Tomorrow.
